Acknowledgments

The publication of this collection would not have been possible without generous contributions and support from both sides of the Atlantic. Particularly in its early stages, its conceptualization and development was made possible by a Research Development Initiative Grant from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada. In applying for this grant, and in realizing much of its initial value, I owe a debt of gratitude to Dr. Richard Cavell of the Faculty of Arts at the University of British Columbia, Vancouver. Others at this same University later provided a supportive environment for final editorial work during a year spent at the Faculty of Education as a visiting professor. Dr. Peter Grimmett and Dr. Stephen Petrina of the Department of Curriculum and Pedagogy are deserving of special thanks for making this visit possible as well as productive. Thanks are also due to Dr. Brett Shelton at Boise State University who provided generous encouragement and support as my department head and made funds available for proofreading work.

I also wish to thank all of the contributors to this collection for their assistance and flexibility. In particular, Dr. Rainer Leschke of the University of Siegen provided me with invaluable early guidance through the terrain of Medienwissenschaft. Dr. Theo Hug of the University of Innsbruck introduced me to Medienwissenschaft and helped me to appreciate the value it held for both educational and philosophical studies. Thanks are due, finally, to the many who provided assistance with proofing and editing, particularly Dr. Darryl Cressman of the University of Maastricht, but also students Sheri Anderson of Boise State University and Sydney Goggins and Eva Petakovic of the University of Missouri.
